UPDATE: the Denton issue is no longer as clear-cut as it appeared. He did in fact fold up his Facebook page, but the original source of the "leaks" from his friends-only page was misrepresented by the person releasing them. It is not now known if the screenshots taken were authentic or faked by the person who originally claimed to have access to Denton's page. Only Denton's timing in closing his page now appears to lend the shots credibility, and so GamerGate generally now considers these to be suspect.

Former game journalist Oliver "Three Dog" Campbell has asserted contact from federal authorities investigating "two certain individuals" who are believed to have sent themselves threats regarding the #GamerGate consumer revolt.

Furthermore. FBI and DHS are aware of and KNOW that at least two certain individuals SENT themselves threats.

Citing ethics regarding sources involved in a federal investigation, Campbell is keeping their identities close to his chest.

Any extra information about my source
WOULD PUT THEM IN REAL JEOPARDY.
There's a reason we have that as a part of

In other #GamerGate news, there was initial disbelief regarding the leak of a friends-only Facebook post from Gawker CEO Nick Denton... mainly because it read like he was twirling a pencil moustache from under a bent top-hat while he wrote it:

Nick Dentonnickdenton

First and foremost I would like to say "Thank You!" to myself and for those who are more than willing to accept a bit of financial compensation in exchange for causing a disruption. I couldn't have done it without you and I appreciate all your hard work.

For those of you that might be quite puzzled at the moment I will clarify. As you may have noticed over the last couple months, there has been a group of individuals eager to ruin my business endeavors at every turn for the sake of "ethics". I would go as far as to use their preferred banner name, but after the work of my new colleagues, I don't see it continuing on much longer. Yes, the circus will finally be leaving town and business will continue as usual.

Over the past few weeks I had tasked my employees for finding a means to destroy that which has been rather resilient. You cannot simply "attack" their leader when they have none, nor could you shun the group as a whole without them using their rainbow coalition to mitigate any claims. Fortunately for myself, I figured it out. I found a way to, as they would put it, "Kill the Batman".

It was there all along and oh so very simple, infiltrate the group and kill them from the inside. The media parade that has been going on for weeks now hasn't done anything worth a damn. Time and effort thrown out the window with needless articles over this shit show. None of it has made a damn bit of difference until now. Everyone is eager to throw themselves at Mainstream outlets, but none of them are eager to spend the money they are already using to fix this problem the right way. So I had someone send out feelers looking for people to work on a "special project" for me. Those that made it through screening have been taking part in an effort to police the group from the inside, causing a wedge to be driven amongst them. Today serves as evidence of money well spent, they have begun to crack and their influential people are beginning to part ways with the group. Eventually there will be such a small minority that it will just blow over and nobody will care.

It feels good and I am proud of myself. I am slaying a giant and there is nothing they can do about it. How does one separate themselves from people claiming to be "doing what is right for the group" by tone policing? You can't and it will continue to be the dagger that kills this silly group of entitled brats.

However, Denton then flipped out about the leak, going so far as to threaten more than the person's job once they were discovered. Laughing it off didn't seem to occur to him:

Congratulations to the imbecile currently employed with my company, this will be changing VERY soon, on ruining what was otherwise a rather pleasant morning. It was my understanding that those of you fortunate enough to be in my good graces would respect my privacy, as I have respected yours. Going forward I am required to be a bit more cautious with allowing people access to my private conversations, so effective this afternoon I will be closing down this account and opening something a bit more discreet for close friends and family members only. It is unfortunate that someone has chosen to violate the trust I bestow upon you, but such is life. For the individual in question, I will be watching and waiting for you to slip up. Once you do and I am able to expose you for the rat you are, finding a new job will be the least of your worries.

In one fell swoop, Denton effectively has destroyed attempts at encouraging "moderate tones" by presenting them himself as "tone policing" meant to divide and destroy the revolt.

A month ago this would have been silly. Where's the motive? Well, Gawker's "Mad" Max Read recently let slip just such a motive, asserting that damage to Gawker's advertising revenues from the #GamerGate scandals has already cost the company thousands and "maybe millions".

If Read's read of the situation is remotely accurate, #GamerGate is hitting Denton squarely in his pocketbook. And while the company was recently valued around $300M, no-one likes dropping seven-figure dollar amounts because of "entitled brats".
