The wood-framed bungalow at 743 Pacific Ave. stood vacant through last summer and fall, waiting for a family.

Not just any family. A Polish family. Three refugees left Poland four years ago, just days before soldiers locked the country in political limbo. The family was stranded in West Berlin, unaware until recently that a church and its followers were shaping their future 5,000 miles away — on Pacific Avenue.

"They would have wanted it that way," Donna Kamler said of her husband's parents. "They're at peace now."

Charles and Josephine Kamler lived in the house more than 45 years, raising three sons and a daughter. They tried to preserve the traditions and language of the Polish Hill neighborhood, an outcrop of homes in Kansas City, Kan., that look down on the decaying industrial bottoms.

Like many older neighbors, they pushed their children to hold dear the Hill's Catholic church and to protect a centuries-old heritage. "Keep up the Polish! Keep up the Polish!"

Four years ago, while Poland ached under martial law, one of the Kamler boys spoke of finding a club to sponsor a refugee. He told his parents; they brightened with expectation.

Why, yes, the Hill needs a new neighbor, a fresh face from the past. "One of our own to keep up the Polish," as the older set would say. The idea sounded grand, but it seemed to vanish like the customs of a bygone era.

Last June, Charles Kamler died of heart failure in a nursing home close to his beloved St. Joseph's and St. Benedict's consolidated church. His wife was in a hospital with a severe blood disorder. When she learned the news, she prayed in Polish. Two weeks later, she joined her husband.

The couple's clothes, furniture and religious artifacts — amassed over more than five decades of wedlock — remained untouched for months in the Pacific Avenue house, its windows dim and cupboards musty.

Then in February, church members flush with energy turned the house upside down, stripped years from the floors and shined the place into the here and now.

They even painted a tiny red and white Polish flag outside the front door. They were nervous. The new neighbors would soon find a home on the Hill.

Roman Kosowski, 36, his wife, Dorota, 30, and their 7-year-old son, Tomasz, would enter the United States with eight suitcases and a blank screen for the future.

The Kosowskis were scared. They envisioned grabbing for jobs, hopping from one apartment to the next and losing their way in a culture governed by a hard language and a hard people.

What they encountered dismissed their fears. Old neighbors new in the same spirit that built Polish Hill a century ago.

"I called the Polish community to sponsor this young family," said Father Wilfred Flanagan, pastor of St. Joseph's. "It gave them an outlet for their religious beliefs."

And it provoked residents of this dying neighborhood to think about what they have and who they are as Americans preparing to celebrate the centennial of the Statue of Liberty.

"No matter what we say about this country, it's still the best in the world," said Pat Walczak. "We take everything for granted. Our houses, electricity, clothing — things that this family had to give up."

voice of America radio reports. Rumors on the streets. Disputed wars in Polish state newspapers. Talk in the factories about an impending general strike. Roman had a feeling: Russia will invade.

On Dec. 6, 1981, one week before the Polish army declared martial law, the Kosowskis traveled to West Berlin on tourist visas to wait out the political storm. "Above all, I was concerned about my family," Roman said.

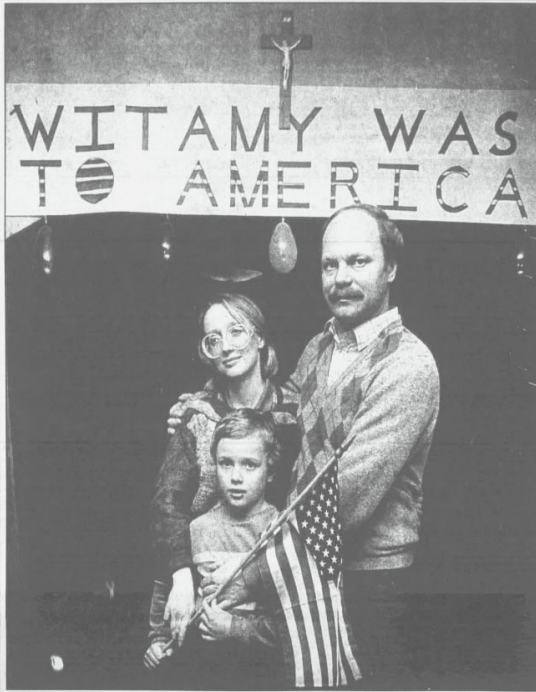

He's a reserved man with alert blue eyes, stocky physique and thinning blond hair. Dorota is petite, mindful of fashion and art. Both are educated and sophisticated. They know patience.

Roman was a member of the Solidarity trade union, which thrived in a 16-month crusade for economic and social reform in the communist nation 50 miles east of the Berlin Wall.

Solidarity erupted in August 1980 with the Lenin shipyard strike in the Baltic seaport of Gdansk. It was the first union in the Soviet bloc free of government control and ultimately drew 10 million followers — 90 percent of the Polish labor force.

Roman left a job as a diagnostic supervisor on an auto manufacturing plant of 70 to 80 workers. He planned to return and open a private service shop in the south-central city of Czestochowa, his hometown and the site of Poland's most revered religious symbol, the Black Madonna painting.

His plans crumbled when Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, Poland's premier and Communist Party leader, turned on his countrymen on Dec. 13, 1981. Martial law caught Roman suspected the evangelical group was a dead end, but he thought he had no recourse. He tangled with officials two more years, then gave up and went back to Raphael's Work in February 1985. "Why did you wait so long to see me?" asked the woman who ran the agency.

He told her the whole story, blow by blow. He preferred America, but... He tried Canada, but... She took over.

She arranged an interview in June for the Kosowskis with the American Consulate in Frankfurt, West Germany. Three weeks later, they received a U.S. government letter granting the key ice-breaker — refugee status. They were so encouraged they sold their bedroom furniture and slept on mattresses for months. Still, they needed a sponsor.

In November, Roman telephoned the woman at Raphael's Work. "Our nerves were totally exhausted," he said.

THE NEW NEIGHBORS

Drawn faces and downturned eyes reveal the Kosowski's weariness, above, during a lengthy delay at La Guardia Airport in New York. After the refugees arrived in Kansas City, Kan., Polish Hill neighbors threw a welcoming party. As it ended, right, Bernice Floersch embraced Dorota Kosowski in the living room of her new home. Fred Kanter waited in line to say goodbye.

On the first night in his own bedroom, Tomasz found himself surrounded by toys and gifts from the neighborhood children. His mother stole a peek, below, as he tested his new bubble-blower.

"That's their business."
The family stared at huge Coca-Cola billboards and roving fleets of cabs and buses blanketed with vacation ads. Dorota knew something was missing. She wrapped an arm around Tomasz and blushed.

"Where's the dog mush?
Dog mush?"
She explained that in West Berlin, a cultured city of gleaming skyscrapers and sprawling parks, everybody proudly herded dogs down the streets and let the pen defecate at will. "You don't dare walk off the curb," she said.

A little later, they descended into the New York subway system. A guitarist — apparently a novice on the down-under, metro-platform circuit — crooned for pocket change. Tomasz hid behind a steel pole. His parents listened. Roman smiled. "In Berlin, it is the same."
A train screeched to a halt. Crazed depictions and gray-painted appeals in Spanish and English flashed the cars. "I knew it would be dirty," Roman said, "but never this bad."

Time was running out. . . . The New York City Public Library near Grand Central Station beckoned. The family walked by a blue mailbox. Tomasz mistook it for a trash dumpster and deposited a beffy wad of gum.

They ducked into the library, scanned the great wealth of books, pounded down steps outside and briefly turned to look at the building.

Always the engineer, Roman concluded, "It's well-traveled but looks really good. They run out of cement and brick in Poland. So a building falls apart before it's finished."

Then the Kosowskis dashed to La Guardia Airport, only to face several delays because of heavy fog. They switched flights and waited for the duration at a terminal restaurant.

Travelers grew surly, unapologetic. The restaurant became crowded. Peddlers shuffled from table to table asking for change.

Roman thought the strangers were peculiar. In Poland, "I remember seeing a beggar when I was very young. Nothing since."

Lines at pay telephones snaked down the halls. Callers moaned and whined about the backlog. The Kosowski kept calm. A seven-hour delay is child's play in Poland, where some people have blown a whole day waiting to buy a book of matches in a state-owned store.

"We knew we had the papers in our pockets," Roman said. "Nobody could chase us out."

As the Kosowski passed the time at La Guardia, about a dozen St. Joseph's parishioners gathered at Kansas City International Airport. Months of planning had brought them to the gate like thoroughbreds in a final race.

They carried gifts—roses and banners. They paced about the wood parquet floors and checked the monitors. Then the word came: Eastern Flight 659, scheduled to arrive at 2:05 p.m., was grounded in Newark, N.J. One question bounced within the assemblage: What now?

They promised to call each other with updates. After the afternoon and evening, telephone lines thrived in Polish Hill.

It's a neighborhood of front porches and red brick sidewalks. Houses look out from the same architectural mold: trim, tidy, blue collar in bearing.

Many of the Hill's residents are resilient, the type seen putting in front yards, restocking trash bags along the worn streets or interrupting weekend walks to pull weeds.

Their Catholic church at Vermont Avenue and Mill Street sits atop Polish Hill. The building design imparts a double-edged theme: sanctuary and fortress. Two brick towers guard a stone arch above three sets of metal doors and a pair of bronze-colored angels flank the steps.

The people of this community built that church with their own hands," said Ed Kanter, 40, who lived with his parents on Pacific Avenue until his mid-20s.

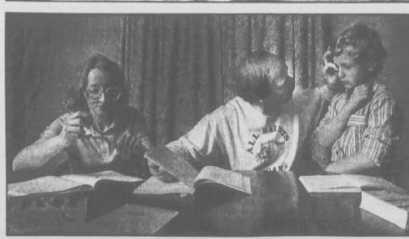

As in Poland, where nearly nine out of 10 citizens are Catholic, the anchor of the Hill is the church. Some older members would find it easier to part from their shadows than the parish.

"I was baptized there. I went to Holy Communion there. I graduated."

Father Wilfred Faugman (center) and other neighbors addressed the Kosowski's concerns, above, as they walked home after Polish Mass at St. Joseph's and St. Benedict's Consolidated Catholic Church. Within their first week here, Roman and Dorota Kosowski began an intensive English language course. Roman took a break from homework, left, to comfort his son.

ated from school and got married there," said Andy Bukaty, 70, president of the Polish American Citizens Club. "When I die, I want to be buried from the St. Joseph's Catholic church."

Father John C. Grudowski handed the backbone of the parish. He became St. Joseph's pastor in 1915, a Polish-born priest who started leading the Mass in the present building's basement. Under his direction, members completed the church in 1923. He died a month after nearly four decades of preaching on the Hill.

"He was very strict," said Bernice Florenz, 68, who lives on South Mill Street. "If the little kids talked to him in English, he would say, 'I can't hear you. I can't hear you.'"

Mary Stark, 65, a longtime church volunteer, recalled the old priest warning the congregation of the "big change" that would come after he died.

And it did.

Most of the early Polish immigrants lacked schooling and job skills. They saw no reason to settle beyond the Hill. They had their own priest, church, shops, clubs, language. "My dad was here for 50 years," Mrs. Florenz said. "His English was still pretty broken."

They were content to work in the meatpacking plants. But sons and daughters wanted better jobs and bigger houses. One by one, they moved. A trickle turned into the current of the times.

The language lost practical appeal. Social clubs gave way to TV and drive-ins. St. Joseph's and St. Benedict's merged in 1976. The diocese could not support two churches four blocks apart.

The contingent of Polish households has dropped by half in 20 years — from 550 in the old St. Joseph's parish to the current 275, Father Fangman said.

Some younger members have maintained ties from the Hill's outskirts and other parts of town, but that has hardly curbed the exodus. About 75 percent of the Polish parishioners are at least 50 years old.

Last summer, Father Fangman asked the parish council whether members thought they were doing enough for people in need. "Yes," they agreed, and set out to find a solution.

They soon dusted off an idea that had patiently waited for the right moment: sponsoring a Polish refugee family — the first by the parish. Fred Kamler, 43, a lifelong neighbor, headed the search committee.

He contacted a local resettlement agency, which operates as a branch of the United States Catholic Conference. Wheels turned and in the passing months, the Kosowskis reached the summit of a heap of paper work.

"Originally they were to come before Thanksgiving," Mr. Kamler said. "The date kept slipping, first to Christmas, then January and into February."

Polish Hill buzzed with speculation. A few grumbled, saying they made it in America without anybody's help. Why this family? Why all the fuss? But many folks tapped a hitherto dormant self-esteem.

The house on Pacific Avenue was waiting away, said Ed Kamler. "My brother, Fred, and I had it in the back of our minds. We've got a perfect opportunity to get a family over here."

The brothers said the house would remain rent-free for two or three months until the refugees got their feet on the ground. The parish offered to cover utility, food and medical bills.

In Poland, acquiring lodgings on short notice is virtually impossible. The housing demand is fierce. In 1977, the Kosowskis learned they would have to wait 12 years to get a two-room apartment in Czestochowa.

After they married, she stayed with her parents and he with his for five months before an apartment was available in a nearby city. By Polish standards, Roman said, "That's lightning fast."

The houses there are small but spacious. Polish Hill residents tend to foster a similar dedication to scour power.

"We wanted the house as nice for them as we would want it for ourselves," Pat Walicki said of the Pacific Avenue project.

Two weeks before the Kosowskis arrived, parishioners hauled out old furniture, clothes and boxes of utensils. They painted rooms and scrubbed venetian blinds in the bathroom.

Hurry, hurry, the new neighbors are coming.

Members headed in donated beds, tables, chairs and appliances. With a few days to go, the parish's All Saints consolidated school sent notes with children asking parents to give food and toiletries to ease the refugees' transition.

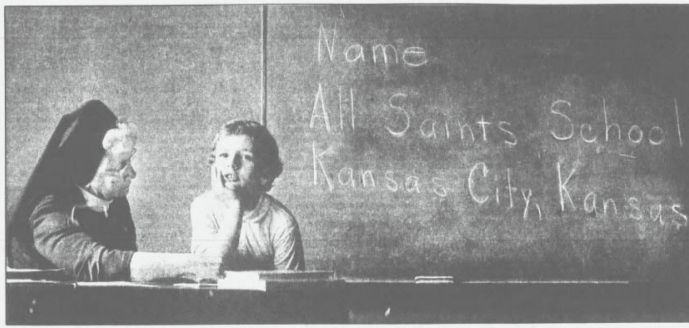

Hurry, hurry, they're coming. Volunteers stuffed the refrigerator, loaded shelves with canned goods and stashed a half-pint jar of vodka on ready reserve.

Then on the last night, several carloads of people rode to KCI. For some, it was their second trip. No one complained. They had done the work. They wanted to leave from deep within.

At 8:30 p.m., Eastern Flight 259 landed. The Kosowskis had not slept in 21 hours. They inched down the aisle to the garble of English. Roman clutched a brief-

During his first day of classes at All Saints consolidated school, left, Tomasz Kosowski was confused by the customs and the language. He froze as other children turned toward the flag to pledge their allegiance. What doubts he had in the classroom never surfaced on the playground, above, where he joked with Jeff Shatto, 7, in a soccer game.

case of documents and passports. The family had no idea who would meet them at KCI, he said. "We planned for the worst and expected anything."

Nor did they know their sponsor's name. If they had to spend the night on the terminal seats, fine. If they were taken to an out-of-the-way hotel, fine. If they had to sleep in someone's basement, fine.

None of that mattered in the long run. Roman said, "If you expect luxury off the top, you're crazy."

He and his wife and son walked into the horse-shoe-shaped terminal. They stopped cold. Two dozen church members shouted, "Witamy, witamy!" — welcome, welcome.

Apprehension fled from Roman's eyes as children raised a long banner that read: Witamy Waz Kosowski.

The greeters circled the family, shaking hands and smiling, passing roses and carnations to Dorota and toys to Tomasz. Those who spoke Polish did. Those who could not faked it.

"Hi, hi, hi," Roman beamed as he discovered in conversation the home on the Hill. No shabby hotel for this family. No dank basement.

The night's just starting, he was told. There's a party. Fetch the luggage, church members said. Hurry, hurry.

There's a party. Hurry.

A caravan of cars soon roiled into Polish Hill and parked along Pacific Avenue. The refugees approached the house cautiously — dared so much, so fast. They walked inside. A faint scent of soap hung in the living room.

They looked around as parishioners fled into the house. A banner taped above the dining room doorway offered a message in Polish and English: Witamy Waz Kosowski.

"This is the first time the house has been filled up since they died,"

Ed Kamler's wife, Dorota, said of his parishioners. "I know they're happy."

Dorota hurried through the living room, waving her hands, prodding visitors to devour the cold cuts on the kitchen. Tomasz — a blond, blue-eyed fellow — played with the American kids. An understanding of toys telescoped the language barrier. "Masters of the Universe," he yelled.

In the basement, Roman briefly inspected the washer and dryer, then he padded upstairs and joined several parishioners in the dining room. They gabbed in Polish about the neighborhood, job opportunities, school for Tomasz.

Some guests carefully avoided the family. Preconceptions that bloomed during weeks of preparation wilted.

"It just surprised me to see her wearing makeup and fingernail polish," said Charles Warczakowski, 32, a carpenter who grew up on the

from-the-show-line-with-packed-plates.

The get-together peaked when someone broke out the vodka and shot glasses. "To Poland!" Bottoms up, guys. Round after round, they pounded the table.

"May this be a healthy house," Another toast.

"May this be a good Polish house." Another toast.

"May this be a good American house."

One celebrant announced, "This is the Polish way." "What? To drink until you see serpents crawling on the floor?"

Right," he said.

Another toast.

Roman, a light drinker, held his own. He and Dorota passed the 24-hour mark with no sleep. Tomasz had cooked out.

The crowd thinned quickly after midnight. Strangers there, hours before hugged and kissed the Kosowskis. They assured the hosts they would meet again: Polish Mass, St. Joseph's church, 9 sharp.

On Sunday, the family arrived early to join the choir in Polish hymns before Mass. Then during services, Father Fangman told the audience that a special collection would go to the refugees. Members tossed coins and bills into baskets guided through the pews.

The Kosowskis watched from the choir loft. "I never expected to meet such great people," Roman said later.

After the Mass, choir members greeted Roman and Dorota with warm words and handshakes. Tomasz fidgeted in his seat. His parents warned him to settle down.

He gaped and swung his arms. Then one elderly lady, with frail hands and stooped shoulders, displayed the wisdom of a dying generation. She stared at Tomasz. He looked curiously at her. She knew his weak spot.

She slipped him one crisp George Washington and said in a conspiratorial tone, "Buy yourself some candy."

After enough confusion to fill a lifetime, Roman Kosowski has united with a different kind of solidarity. If the political climate were more hospitable in Poland, he would prefer home — close to his parents.

That's not the case. Still, he hopes to visit his family and friends in five years. And when he does, he will tell them about the home on the Hill and the people he met.

He will tell them of the English language courses he and his wife took and the carpentry jobs he worked at the start. He will tell them about his son's first day of school at All Saints and the old man who could speak to the youngster in Polish.

He will tell them of his first car and the big shopping malls he saw. And should friends and family ask, "Is it true all Americans are new?" he can expertly report to the contrary.

And he will tell them of the conversation winds down, of the one maxim that guided him through those early months. "It is 'luck,'" he will say, "is better than money."

At school, Tomasz Kosowski quickly made his name preference known to his classmates: "Call me Tommy."

Ed Kamler's wife, Dorota, said of his parishioners. "I know they're happy."

APPROVING SUPERVISOR

Kosowski, Tomasz was brought into the jail by Allied Transport Officer Barnes on behalf of Largo Police Detective Colin Bolton on the charge of (F)Murder in the First Degree. Nurse Parpyano was notified and responded to evaluate Kosowski. Due to the nature of this charge, Nurse Parpyano placed Kosowski on Close Observation Status. Kosowski was dressed in only a jail issued uniform. No injuries reported. A 15 minute watch form was initiated and maintained. One photograph was taken and attached to this report. Sergeant Tournai was notified.

APPROVING SUPERVISOR

While assisting in 4H2, I received notification from Inmate Records Specialist Perez that Inmate Kosowski's attorney Ms. Ramos-Wicks was attempting to contact me via telephone. Specialist Perez gave me the phone number of Ms. Ramos-Wicks (813) 777-8701, and I returned her call. Upon speaking with Ms. Ramos-Wicks, she informed me of Kosowski's concern regarding his commissary and personal property. I advised Ms. Ramos-Wicks that commissary would be arriving later in the day, and I would inquire about the issue. I also advised Ms. Ramos-Wicks of the personal property delivery days, and advised her I would speak with Inmate Kosowski regarding these concerns, as well as, updating her with my findings. Ms. Ramos-Wicks appeared receptive and appreciative of the above information, and in addition requested my personal information for further contact, to which I denied. I did provide Ms. Ramos-Wicks with my agency e-mail for any further inquiries regarding Kosowski. I also spoke with Inmate Kosowski and informed him if he had any concerns to address it with staff members before contacting his attorney with these issues, and he appeared receptive. Sergeant Fortner was notified.

While I was conducting Breakfast food tray distribution in 4H2, I placed a breakfast tray on the food trap of Inmate Kosowski's cell. I also verbally alerted Kosowski that his tray had arrived. Kosowski looked in my direction and acknowledged my attempt, however did not get up from his bed. Kosowski's breakfast tray was left on the trap, allowing Kosowski additional time to retrieve it, to no avail. Let it be noted that Kosowski was observed throughout the shift consuming food from his commissary that was delivered yesterday. Nurse Sullivan was notified and advised staff that this was Kosowski first meal refusal. A notation of this occurrence was updated in Kosowski JIMS contact log. Corporal Frost and Sergeant Gollyhorn were present during breakfast food tray distribution.

APPROVING SUPERVISOR

While I was distributing trays for dinner, CJS Bradley requested me to go to Pod 2. I walked up to the food trap of Pod 2 and saw Inmates Kosowski and Hart engaged in a physical altercation in front of Cell 2. I ordered both inmates to cease their actions, and at first, they refused. I radioed "Inmate fight 2F2" and the above staff responded. As staff were arriving, both inmates separated. Kosowski was ordered into the vestibule and complied. Kosowski was placed in handcuffs and escorted to the vestibule of Pod 9 to deescalate. Hart was ordered to Cell 2 and complied. With sufficient staff present, staff entered Pod 2. Hart was placed in handcuffs and escorted to the South Division Clinic, where he was evaluated by Nurse Sanders and subsequently cleared to remain in General Population. Kosowski was escorted to the South Division clinic, evaluated by Nurse Sanders, and cleared to remain. Both inmates stated to staff that it was a mutual fight over tensions brewing within the pod. Due to the altercation being mutual and neither inmate having any prior infractions, both inmates received a Corrective Consultation for (XVII-B15) Fighting with Another Person. Classification Specialist Hoppe was notified and facilitated both relocations and initiated a "Do not House" for incompatibles. Both inmates' property and tablets were collected, searched by staff, and verified by the respective inmates. Hart was relocated to Upper G Pod 11, and Kosowski was relocated to 4F3. Both relocations were completed separately and without incident. Corporal Bing was notified and responded. Sergeant Hammack was notified and responded. Five photographs were attached to the report.

APPROVING SUPERVISOR

Upon responding to 2F Pod 2, both inmates were already separated and secured in handcuffs. I spoke with Inmate Hart and Inmate Kosowski separately. Both inmates stated that they had been getting on each other's nerves over the past few days and that the situation escalated into a physical altercation today. Both inmates apologized for their actions and were cooperative during the investigation. I reviewed DVR Camera C3320 from 1508 hours to 1515 hours. At approximately 1508 hours, both inmates can be observed arguing. Hart enters Cell 2, followed by Kosowski. Kosowski then exits the cell and begins eating his meal at a dayroom table. Hart exits Cell 2 shortly afterward and begins swinging an empty food tray at Kosowski (the tray does not make contact with Kosowski). Hart re-enters Cell 2, with Kosowski following, and a physical altercation occurs. During the altercation, both inmates fall out of Cell 2 onto the dayroom floor. At approximately 1515 hours, the inmates briefly embrace, and separate. Both Corrective Consultations were signed and forwarded with end of shift paperwork. Lieutenant Stowell responded to this incident. KH5560

A scheduled shakedown was conducted in 4F Pods 2 and 3. All staff members who participated in the shakedown are listed above. All the inmates complied with the verbal instructions they were given by staff. The inmates were pat searched in the dayroom area, yielding no contraband. Staff secured inmates from Pod 2 in Visitation Booth A and Pod 3 inmates were secured in Visitation Booth B while a thorough search of their cells and common areas was completed. Prior to and after the shakedown, both Visitation Booths A and B were searched, noting no discrepancies. During the shakedown, nuisance contraband was found and disposed of accordingly. All extra linens were confiscated and sent to IB Laundry to be sanitized and redistributed. During the search, Inmate Kosowski was found to be in possession of a personal radio. Staff collected, inventoried, and placed Kosowski's personal radio in the A-Wing Property Bin. All gates were manually checked during the shakedown, and all appeared to be operational. At the conclusion of the shakedown, all inmates returned to the pod without issue. The shakedown was notated in the 4F JIMS log, along with the South Division Shakedown Calendar. Sergeant Sivik and Corporal Wiley were present for this shakedown.

A scheduled shakedown was conducted in 4F Pod's 2 & 3. The above listed staff members participated in the shakedown. Prior to the shakedown, all inmates housed in Pod's 2 & 3 were given verbal directives to follow and all inmates complied. The inmates were then pat searched in the dayroom with no contraband found. The inmates were secured in Visitation Booths A and B for the duration of the shakedown. The Visitation Booths were searched prior to and following the shakedown with no contraband discovered. A detailed search was conducted in all cells and common areas. Nuisance contraband and excess jail issued linens and uniforms were collected. The nuisance contraband was disposed of, and the extra linens and uniforms were returned to laundry to be cleaned and reissued. An operational test was completed on all interior manual release gates and fire doors. All gates and doors functioned properly. Once the shakedown was completed, all the inmates returned to their assigned cells without incident. All tablets were secured in the charging post and individually inspected with no damage noted. While searching Federal Inmate Lewis' and Inmate Kosowski's property, it was discovered that they were in possession of Bibles/Religious Books, which were confiscated and placed into their property. A copy of the Inmate Property Inventory Forms were forwarded to South Division Administration for scanning. This shakedown was documented in 4F's JIMS Log, SharePoint, and in the South Division Shakedown calendar. Sergeant Hastings was present and participated in the shakedown.

A scheduled shakedown was conducted in 4F, Pods 2 and 3, with the listed staff members participating. Prior to the shakedown, all inmates were issued verbal directives regarding the shakedown procedure. All inmates were pat searched and secured in 4F Visitation Booths "A" and "D" for the duration of the shakedown. Both visitation booths were searched by staff before and after inmate placement, yielding no contraband. During the shakedown, Inmate Kosowski was found to be in possession of an extra pair of earbuds. When Sergeant Sivik and I spoke to Kosowski about his extra pair of earbuds, he became frustrated with us and stated, "Show me in the inmate handbook where it says that." The headphones were collected and sent to A-Wing in the Property Bin. All trash was discarded, and excess linens were forwarded to IB laundry for cleaning and redistribution. All pod gates underwent a manual release function check and were found to be operational. All issued inmate Smart Communications tablets were inspected, with no visible damage observed, and all appeared to be in proper working order. After the shakedown was concluded, I spoke to Kosowski and informed him the Inmate Handbook allows one pair of earbuds per inmate/detainee. Inmate Kosowski responded with "It's up to you to prove not to me to find it." Then he handed me his tablet and walked away, I pulled up the Inmate Handbook and advised him page 16, number 6 and concluded my conversation. Sergeant Sivik was advised. The shakedown was recorded in the South Division Shakedown Log as well as the 4F ATIMS log. The Property Inventory Sheet was completed and forwarded to South Administration. One photograph was taken and is attached to this report. Sergeant Sivik was present.
