Workplace dynamic threat management consultation as we practice it consists of two fundamental components:

A data-driven process of assessing risk of violence to a particular targeted individual or group, initially and ongoing; and

Intervening with recognized and prudent strategies for the purposes of interrupting escalation, reducing risk, redirecting stakeholders focus for non-risk situations, and managing workplace and campus disruption and anxiety.

WTS staff consultants are licensed mental health professionals with established records of specialization in risk assessment and risk management strategies. All have developed strong independent practices in addition to their WTS affiliation and service. Most of our members have academic affiliations at major universities and several are regular contributors to empirical research and peer-reviewed professional literature. We have accomplished thousands of consultations to employers of all sizes in diverse industries, governmental agencies, and in campus contexts.
