The screenshot shows a web browser at the URL thegabber.com/about-the-gabber-newspaper/. The page features a navigation bar with links for ABOUT, ADVERTISE!, GET YOUR GABBER, and SUPPORT, along with social media icons and a search bar. A prominent banner for 'The GABBER' includes the text 'FLORIDA'S OLDEST INDEPENDENT WEEKLY NEWSPAPER' and a 'SUBSCRIBE NOW' call to action. Below the navigation, a menu lists categories like NEWS, ARTS, FOOD, LIFESTYLE, EVENTS, GULFPORT WEBCAM, CURRENT ISSUE, CLASSIFIED ADS, and STORM COVERAGE. The main content area is titled 'ABOUT THE GABBER' and features a large logo for 'The GABBER' with the tagline 'FLORIDA'S OLDEST INDEPENDENT WEEKLY NEWSPAPER'. The text below the logo reads 'Gulfport's Number-One News Source' and 'The Gabber Newspaper History'. The history text states: 'The Gabber Newspaper — originally the Gulfport Gabber — was founded in 1968 by George Brann, primarily to cover Gulfport city council. Brann's paper soon became a vital resource for the community, expanding the advertising base and coverage, to include features, community news and events. Elsie and Ted Havness bought the paper from Brann in 1980 and sold to Ken and Deb Reichart 1992, who owned the paper for 28 years before selling to Cathy Salustri Loper and Barry Loper in June 2020.' A subsequent paragraph describes the newspaper's service area: 'The Gabber Newspaper is the oldest independent weekly newspaper in Florida. We serve South Pinellas communities — from Redington Beach to Tierra Verde; from Gulfport to Pinellas Park; and in south, west, and downtown St. Petersburg, you'll find local news, community events, in-depth feature stories, and the most extensive classifieds of any weekly newspaper in the area.' The final paragraph states: 'The Gabber Newspaper is an independent, family owned newspaper. We're proud of our history and our future.'

The Gabber Newspaper Mission

The Gabber Newspaper has no agenda other than to inform the public through accurate and honest reporting, to engage the community, and help us all better understand our hyper-local and regional world.

We believe all politics are local, and that what we do, as journalists and as private citizens — even on a small scale — echoes throughout our community. Our mission and values are at the heart of everything we do, from political and cultural reporting, to design elements and community involvement.

The Gabber Newspaper Policies on Fact Checking and Transparency

The Gabber Newspaper Policies on Fact Checking and Transparency

As a news outlet, our primary responsibility is to disseminate information in as clear, concise, and correct a manner as possible.

The Gabber Newspaper's editorial staff makes every effort to confirm the veracity of facts in articles. We do this as appropriate to the nature, complexity, and time constraints of the piece.

We check facts, not opinions. With hyperbolic statements, we verify the fact at its source and make every effort to clarify quotes that may be misleading.

As necessary, and whenever possible, writers and editorial staff independently verify facts, claims, and allegations, particularly those made by public officials or sources.

Corrections

How we handle errors in our reporting is at the heart of our ethics and transparency policies. If we're wrong, we say so — and correct our mistake as swiftly as possible. We correct errors in print, online, and across social media platforms.

The Gabber Newspaper follows AP guidelines for corrections. Our writers must notify editorial staff of errors in reporting as soon as possible. We will acknowledge the error to our readers and address it clearly in an editor's note — at the top of the web post or in the first pages of our print issue. When we make corrections to a post online, we mark the date and time, and identify the incorrect information in the original post.

We welcome corrections and clarifications from our readers, and will print or post them as soon as they are verified. To report a correction or clarification, please email news@thegabber.com.
